AWARD

By Government of India, Ministry of Labour, Order No. LR.2(365), dated 5th May 1952 read with Order No. LR.2(395), dated 4th February 1953, the dispute between the employers in relation to the collieries specified in Schedule I of the first Order referred to above and their workmen regarding the following matters has been referred for adjudication to this Tribunal:—

- (1) Whether the workmen are entitled to full pay and allowances for the holidays on August 15, 1950, January 26, 1951, August 15, 1951 and January 26, 1952?
- (2) Whether the workmen should receive full pay and allowances for the holidays on the ‘Independence Day’ and the ‘Republic Day’ in future?

2. The collieries referred to in Schedule I of Order No. LR.2(365), dated 5th May 1952 are 1,078 in number. Practically, they represent all the collieries in the whole of India. In other words, the above dispute relates to the entire coal industry and the workmen employed in the coal industry in the whole of India.

As I said above, the above dispute was referred to this Tribunal by Order, dated 5th May 1952. A copy of the Order reached this Tribunal on 4th June 1952. By that time, my predecessor Shri S. P. Varma had retired and hence the reference remained dormant on the file of this Tribunal. After I took charge on 7th February 1953, I issued notices to each of the 1,078 collieries mentioned in the above order and also to the different labour unions. The parties were directed to give intimation of the notices to all workmen by exhibiting copies thereof at conspicuous places and by other appropriate means.

3. In reply to the notices, different labour unions filed their written statement claiming that 15th August and 26th January in every year should be given as paid holidays to all workmen employed in the collieries. The Indian National Mine Workers Federation, Dhanbad, and the Colliery Mazdoor Congress, Asansol, filed statements as representing the labour in several collieries. The Koyala Mazdoor Panchayat also filed statements as representing some other collieries. In addition to this, the labour unions of some other collieries filed their respective written statements.

4. Before proceeding further, I may mention here that Mr. Mullick, who appeared on behalf of certain collieries, argued that the workmen of some collieries had not filed a written statement claiming the above days as paid holidays, and in their case, it should be held that they do not make any such claim, and they should be held as not entitled to any such holiday. This contention cannot be accepted. This reference has been made to this Tribunal, because Government is of opinion that a dispute regarding giving of the above days as paid holidays is in existence; prima facie, it must be held that all workmen have made this claim and that it has been denied by the employers. If any workmen have given up their claim, there should be a specific statement to that effect. Mere non-appearance would not mean that the claim is given up.

5. I may also refer to Section 10(5) of the Industrial Disputes Act. Thereunder, where a dispute concerning any establishment or establishments has been or is to be, referred to a Tribunal, and the Government is of opinion that the dispute is of such a nature that any other establishment, group or class of establishments of a similar nature is likely to be interested in, or affected by, such dispute, the Government, at the time of making the reference or any time thereafter but before the submission of the award, include in that reference such establishment, group or class of establishments, whether or not at the time of such inclusion any dispute exists or is apprehended in that establishment, group or class of establishments. From the fact that all collieries in the whole of India and their workmen are made parties to this reference, it would appear that Government have acted under Section 10(5) also, and want the above points to be decided for the entire industry, irrespective of the question whether workmen in a particular colliery have claimed the days as paid holidays or not. Hence, even if workmen of some collieries do not appear before the Tribunal, the above questions would have to be decided for the entire industry.

6. So far as the employers are concerned, several of the collieries appeared through the Indian Mining Association, who filed a common written statement on their behalf. Several other collieries authorised Mr. Mullick of the Indian Mining Federation to represent them and their written statements were filed through him in almost identical terms. Several other collieries were represented by the Indian Colliery Owners Association who filed a written statement on their behalf. All these three sets of collieries opposed the claim of the workmen for getting paid holidays on the above two days.

7. On the other hand, there were several collieries who wrote to the Tribunal that they were giving paid holidays to their workmen on the above days; while some collieries wrote to the Tribunal that they were not working at present.

8. After notices were served on all concerned, the matter was fixed for hearing on 25th August 1953. On that day, a compromise application Exhibit 78 signed by the Chairman of the Indian Mining Association and the Secretary, Indian National Mine Workers Federation, was put up before me and I was requested that this compromise should be recorded and an award passed in terms thereof. Under the terms of this compromise, the Committee of the Indian Mining Association agreed to recommend to its members to grant paid holidays in future on 15th August and 26th January every year beginning from 15th August 1953. Regarding past holidays, it agreed to recommend to its members to accept 26th January 1952, 15th August 1952 and 26th January 1953 as paid holidays. The other parties to the dispute told me that they did not know the terms of this compromise and I therefore gave time to enable all the parties to study the terms of this compromise; and if they thought fit, to come to an agreed settlement, so that there may be a general compromise between all employers and all the workmen regarding this dispute. The matter was therefore adjourned to 16th September 1953, on which date I was told that the other parties were not agreed to the terms of the above compromise; that is the colliery owners other than those who were represented by Indian Mining Association and the labour unions other than those represented by the Indian National Mine Workers Federation did not accept these terms.

9. Before going to the merits of the case, I must first consider whether and how far I can and should pass an award in terms of this compromise. As I said above, the present dispute is between the entire coal industry on the one hand and all their workmen on the other. It is not a dispute relating to one colliery or a group of collieries but represents the entire industry. The compromise has been entered into by a section of the colliery owners and a section of the workmen. It may be that the colliery owners represented by the Indian Mining Association may be employing a majority of the workmen employed in the coal industry. But it is an admitted fact that all the workmen working in the Indian Mining Association collieries are not members of the labour unions affiliated to the Indian Mine Workers Federation. A compromise cannot bind parties other than those who entered into that compromise and the above terms cannot therefore bind any of the colliery owners other than who had authorised the Indian Mining Association to appear on their behalf in this case, nor would it bind the workmen other than those who were members of the Indian Mine Workers Federation. In any case, therefore, an award in terms of the compromise binding all the employers and all workmen cannot be passed.

10. The question then would be whether an award could be passed so as to bind the parties to the compromise itself. Here there are many practical difficulties. The first is that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain as to which workmen were members of the Indian Mine Workers Federation so as to make the above compromise binding on them. I am considering this point before I consider the merits of the case to point out further practical difficulties. Supposing the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the Independence Day and the Republic Day should be given as paid holidays, then on what grounds can it refuse paid holidays for three of the past days? I can quite appreciate that when there is the question of mutual bargaining, there has to be the policy of give and take and each party has to give up some claim to come to a final settlement. I am quite satisfied that it was in this spirit of mutual bargaining that the Indian Mining Association and the Indian National Mine Workers Federation entered into the above compromise, and that they did so bona fide. But as I pointed out above, the Indian Mining Association does not represent the entire industry and the Indian National Mine Workers Federation does not represent the entire labour. Other colliery owners and the other workmen naturally cannot be bound by the above compromise and if the Tribunal held that the workmen were entitled to paid holidays on the Independence Day and Republic Day, there was no reason why the workmen should be deprived of three out of the six past holidays. If an award were passed to the effect that workmen who were members of the Indian Mine Workers Federation should get three past holidays while the other workmen should get six days, it would lead to complications and repercussions and to unrest in the industry. On the other hand, if the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the above days should not be given as paid holidays, it would mean that the collieries represented by the Indian Mining Association may have to give the above days as paid holidays, to workmen who were members of the Indian National Mine Workers Federation, but not to other workmen, while the other colliery owners would not have to give those paid holidays to any one. This also would lead to unsatisfactory results. In either case, instead of there being peace in the industry, there would be unnecessary disputes between different sets of collieries and different sets of workmen and this is a thing which the Tribunal should try to avoid. Not only would there be different practices in different collieries; but even in the same colliery, there would be difference between different sets of workmen.

11. I may also point out here that under the terms of the compromise the Indian Mining Association has agreed that its committee would recommend to its members to grant paid holidays on 15th August and 26th January every year. In other words, even the members of the Indian Mining Association are not bound to give these days as paid holidays, because they may not carry out the recommendations of the Indian Mining Association. As it is, I am told, that several collieries who are members of the Indian Mining Association have failed to carry out the above recommendations on 15th August 1953, in spite of a circular from the Indian Mining Association. This would mean that this compromise is not of a binding nature at least so far as the colliery owners are concerned.

12. I may lastly mention that the present reference has been made between the entire industry, i.e. between all the collieries in the whole of India and their workmen as a whole. It would not be proper or desirable that there should be different awards for different collieries. The award should be one and unanimous and for all the collieries and for all workmen. On the whole, I hold that no award in terms of the compromise should be passed so as to bind anyone.

13. I now come to the merits of the case and the main point for consideration is whether the workmen working in the coal industry should be given paid holidays on the Independence Day and the Republic Day every year. The workmen demand these holidays as paid holidays on the ground that these days are days of national rejoicing and they should therefore be given them as paid holidays to enable them to observe them as days of rejoicing. In this connection, they have also urged that these days are given as paid holidays not only by different trade associations but they are given as paid holidays in the different industries. Lastly, they have asked these holidays on the ground that there should be a number of paid holidays so that the workmen can have just and humane conditions of work.

14. The colliery owners resisted the claim and urged that giving of these holidays would involve the coal industry in a heavy financial commitment, and that the present state of the industry did not justify imposition of this additional burden. They have also contended that the Conciliation Board Award of 1947 rejected the workmen's claim for festival holidays with pay, and that award stated that if the workmen wanted to enjoy any festival holiday, they should do so by taking leave on those particular days. Mr. Mullick on behalf of the Indian Mining Federation collieries further urged that the Tribunal would have no jurisdiction to adjudicate this dispute because of Article 37 of the Constitution of India. He also urged that no provision has been made in the Indian Mines Act, 1952 for granting of these holidays.

15. Taking up Mr. Mullick's contention that this Tribunal could not adjudicate on this dispute under Article 37 of the Constitution of India, his argument was that under Article 42 the State had to make provision for securing just and humane conditions of work and under Article 43, the State had to endeavour to secure, by suitable legislation and economic organisation or any other way, to all workers, agricultural, industrial or otherwise, work, a living wage, conditions of work ensuring a decent standard of life and full enjoyment of leisure and social and cultural opportunities. It was then argued that these articles (i.e. 42 and 43) were in Part IV of the Constitution and Article 37 which was also in Part IV lays down that the provisions contained in the part shall not be enforceable by any court. It was therefore urged by Mr. Mullick that as the present dispute relates to giving of holidays to workmen on the ground that they must have conditions of work ensuring a decent standard of life and full enjoyment of leisure, and social and cultural opportunities and also for securing just and humane conditions of work, these provisions could not be enforced by any court under Article 37. I am unable to agree with this contention.

16. Part IV of the Constitution of India deals with Directive Principles of the State policy and among others, Articles 42 and 43 lay down as to what the State should do or should try to do. When Article 37 lays down that the provisions contained in the part shall not be enforceable by any court, it only means that no court can order the State to do any of the things laid down in any of the articles in this part. For instance, no court can ask the State to make provision for securing just and humane conditions of work nor can any court order the State to pass suitable legislation to secure to all workers conditions of work ensuring decent standard of life and full enjoyment of leisure etc.

17. I may mention here that the latter part of Article 37 lays down that the principles laid down in Part IV are only fundamentals in the governance of the country and it shall be the duty of the State to apply these principles in making laws. If I may say so, with great respect, it is in furtherance of the directives mentioned in Articles 42 and 43 of the Constitution that Acts like the Factories Act, Industrial Disputes Act, the Mines Act and the like have been passed. It could not be said that by passing an award directing the colliery owners to give paid holidays to workmen on particular days, the Tribunal is committing a breach of Article 37 of the Constitution; because, as I said above, that article would prohibit a court from ordering the State to do particular things or pass particular laws etc. But if the State has passed a particular law, it is the duty of every court and Tribunal to act according to that law and if the Tribunal found that giving of above holidays as paid holidays was necessary for securing just and humane conditions of work or for securing to the workers social and cultural opportunities and full enjoyment of leisure, it must pass an award to that effect and Article 37 would not bar the jurisdiction of this court in doing so. I therefore hold that this objection raised by Mr. Mullick has no substance.

18. The question then is whether the above days should be given as paid holidays to the workmen working in the different collieries in India. There cannot be any doubt that the above days are days of very great national importance. Unlike other festival holidays, which pertain to a section of the public and which are observed by only different sections, the above holidays are days of importance and festivity for every national of India. For instance, Christmas Day would be a day of importance only to Christians. Ramzan, Id and Bakrid would be days of importance only to Muslims. The Diwali or Durga Puja would be days of importance only to Hindus. Pateti would be a day of importance only to Parsis. These days will be days of festivity and importance to that particular community only. Again, some of these days have importance in some area of the country and not in other areas. Contrary to this, the Independence Day and Republic Day are days of importance throughout the length and breadth of the country and all sections of the public. Every nation has its national day and all people in that country celebrate it. Similarly the above days are national days for this country and all must celebrate them. The workmen working in the collieries are also Indian nationals and are entitled to celebrate those holidays, like every other national of India.

19. It may be noted that these days are observed as paid holidays for different industries. The Government observes them as holidays and all Government offices are closed on that day. The above days are also included in the list of holidays declared under the Negotiable Instruments Act by the different States. It is significant to note in this connection, that whereas there is a difference regarding other holidays between different States, there is unanimity so far as these two days are concerned. The different trades and associations in the different parts of the country observe the above days as paid holidays. The written statements Exhibit 14 (filed by the Koyala Mazdoor Panchayat) and Exhibit 21 (filed by the Indian National Mine Workers Federation and Colliery Mazdoor Congress) described as to who are observing these holidays. It may be noted that these allegations have not been denied in the written statements filed by the colliery owners. The State Railway Collieries and the coalmines situated in Madhya Pradesh and Hyderabad observe these days as paid holidays. The Mica industry in the Hazaribagh, Sugar industry in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar, shop and commercial establishments in Uttar Pradesh, the factory of the Bata Shoe Company, the industrial concerns of Burnpur, Jamshedpur, Kulti and Kumardhubi, all observe these days as paid holidays. Industrial concerns like Cotton, Jute, Engineering etc. also provide for these days as paid holidays. The different Tribunals in the country have also awarded these days as paid holidays to different concerns. For instance, the Bombay Tribunal has awarded these holidays as paid holidays to the workers of the Bombay Engineering and Metal Workers. The Bengal Tribunal has awarded these paid holidays in the Jute industry and engineering works of West Bengal. Actually my predecessor also awarded the above days as paid holidays in his award in Reference 10 of 1951, which award was however set aside by the Appellate Tribunal on the technical grounds that the employers were not made parties to the reference and they had not been served with notices thereof. In view of this, it would but be fair that the workmen in the coal industry should also get the above paid holidays. The workmen of the coal industry work under unfavourable conditions and they should not be put in a worse position than the workmen working in other industries. When the workmen in other industries in the country get the above days as paid holidays, the workmen in the coal industry should also get the above days as paid holidays.

20. In this connection, I may mention that during the last three or four years, the workmen in the different collieries did observe these days as holidays for rejoicing and celebrating national days. As the matter was not decided and as the present reference was pending, the above days had not been declared as paid holidays by any colliery. In spite of this, the workmen in different collieries absented themselves from work on these days; and in some cases, the employers urged that the absence of the workmen should be treated as their being on an illegal strike and the Regional Labour Commissioner declared such absence as illegal strike. In some cases, matters came before me in appeal and I had to hold that the absence amounted to an illegal strike, as it was a concerted action without notice. I am mentioning this fact only to show that the workmen in the coal industry have been absenting themselves from work on these days to celebrate them even at the risk of losing not only their wages for the day, but also bonus. This also shows that these days are days of national importance observed as such by the workmen working in the coal industry and they should be given as paid holidays.

21. Coming to the different objections raised by the colliery owners in this connection, the first objection is that coal industry work is a continuous work and there should be no interruption therein and giving of a holiday would interrupt the regular working. This allegation is made in the written statement of the Indian Mining Association, who have later on agreed to these days being treated as paid holidays. I may also point out here that even at present all collieries remain closed on Sundays. They have got to remain closed for a day in a week under the provisions of the Indian Mines Act and if the closure of the colliery for a day in a week does not cause interruption, I fail to see how the closing thereof on two national days in a year would cause such an interruption.

22. It was urged that under the provisions of the Conciliation Board's Award, no provision was made for paid holidays to celebrate festival days. Para. 9 of the Conciliation Board Award deals with Pooja leave, and it has been observed by the Conciliation Board that they considered that if desired, this (Puja leave) may be taken from the accrued annual leave but that payment for Puja days as such could not be supported. It was argued from this that the Conciliation Board Award did not grant any paid holidays for festivals and hence the Independence Day and the Republic Day should not be granted as paid holidays. In this connection, it was contended by the representatives of the labour that the Conciliation Board Award was not the last word on the subject and that the workmen were not satisfied with the several provisions of the Conciliation Board Award and also that they have been agitating for a revision of these provisions; hence merely because the Conciliation Board Award did not grant a particular demand of the workmen, it could not be said that that demand could never be granted in future. It was also argued that it was open to the workmen to re-agitate the question and it would be open to the Tribunal, if satisfied about the reasonableness of the demand, to grant it, even if the Conciliation Board Award had rejected it. I think that there is considerable force in these arguments. I am satisfied that if the Tribunal holds that a particular clause of the Conciliation Board Award requires revision, it will be open to the Tribunal, especially in a reference of this type where the entire industry and the entire labour are represented, to revise that clause.

23. It may be noted that the above clause of the Conciliation Board Award deals with Pooja leave. As mentioned above, the Pooja days are days of festivity for Hindus only and it could not be said that all workmen working in the industry were Hindus or should be given these as paid holidays. In this connection, it is pertinent to note that the Conciliation Board Award was signed on 12th April 1947 and was published in the Gazette of India on 12th May 1947, i.e. before India became Independent on 15th August 1947 and a Republic on 26th January 1950. The question of granting Independence Day and Republic Day as paid holidays therefore did not arise at the time and it could not be said that the Conciliation Board Award refused to give these days as paid holidays. Further, as I said above, even if the Conciliation Board Award had not granted a particular demand, it could not be said that demand could never be granted in the future. Looking to the merits of the claim of the workmen in this connection, I am satisfied that even if the Conciliation Board Award had rejected this claim, it would have granted it.

24. It was then urged that the Indian Mines Act did not make any provision for giving of paid holidays on the Independence Day and the Republic Day. It was argued that under the definition of leave given in Section 49, it did not include weekly days of rest or holidays for festivals or other similar occasions. This however would not necessarily mean that no holidays should or could be granted for festivals. Actually the above clause would mean that giving of holidays for festivals was in contemplation and if such holidays were given, they would not be included in the definition of leave for the purpose of Chapter VII of the Indian Mines Act. In the explanation to sub-section 2 of Section 51, it has been mentioned that the period of leave in the cases mentioned therein shall be inclusive of weekly days of rest and any holiday (if granted) which may occur during such period. This also means that giving of a holiday was contemplated by the Indian Mines Act. In other words, the Indian Mines Act has contemplated giving of holidays. Merely because it does not lay down that there shall be paid holidays on Independence Day and Republic Day, it does not mean that these days cannot be granted as paid holidays. It was not the function of the Indian Mines Act to define as to which days should be given as paid holidays and it has not been defined any day as paid holiday. But it does contemplate giving of paid holidays by the industry. It does not therefore come in the way of granting of paid holidays on Independence and Republic days.

25. It was then argued that Standing Orders for the coal industry did not provide for these holidays. Merely because they did not provide for these paid holidays, it cannot be said that they cannot be granted. If the standing orders had provided for the giving of the Independence Day and Republic Day as paid holiday, probably this dispute would not have been arisen. In such a case, the coal industry would have been bound to give them as paid holidays because of the standing orders. I may however point out that the standing orders also do contemplate giving of holidays. For instance, rule 3 provides that notices specifying holidays, pay days, and wage rates payable to all classes of workers shall be posted at the office of the mine. In other words, the standing orders do contemplate giving of holidays.

26. It was then urged that the Joshi Agreement and other agreements do not provide for the above holidays with pay. If there had been such an agreement, there would have been no necessity for the present reference; because in such a case the industry would have been bound by that agreement to give the above days as paid holidays. But the Joshi agreement does contemplate giving of holidays with pay. For instance, clauses (4) (a), (b), (c), of the agreement use the words 'work on a closed holiday', 'work done on a day which is a holiday', and 'work done on.....a day which is a closed holiday', respectively. This shows that the Joshi Agreement did also contemplate giving of a holiday with pay.

27. It was then strenuously argued that giving of holidays would amount to a financial burden on the industry and that the present condition of the industry would not justify the imposition of this extra burden. In this connection, I was told that the stocks of coal were piling up; that several collieries have been sold for non-payment of bonus; that the coal prices fixed in 1945 and revised in 1947 had been reduced in 1949 and also that after the publication of the Conciliation Board Award, several new taxes have been imposed on the industry. It was also urged that coal was a wasting industry and it was running the risk of even losing the capital. I need not go in detail in all these contentions; because for the purpose of the present reference, it is not necessary to do so as it would raise the average cost of production by a very small amount.

28. The implication of giving of paid holidays on the Independence Day and Republic Day would amount giving of two paid holidays per year. The annual report of the Chief Inspector of Mines in India for 1950 shows the average number of persons working in the coalmines in the year 1941 to 1950 at table No. 6, Appendix I at page 123 as being 214,944 in 1941, 212,053 in 1942, 209,159 in 1943 and then gradually rising to 349,889 in 1950. In 1951 the daily average number of persons working in the coalmines in the whole of India was 351,975 as shown at page 9, Table No. 4 of the Indian Coal Statistics 1951, issued by the Chief Inspector of Mines in India. The daily average number of persons working in the collieries in April 1953 and May 1953 was 346,544 and 348,801 respectively as can be seen from page 2, section 2 of the Monthly Coal Bulletins for April 1953 and May 1953 respectively issued by the Chief Inspector of Mines in India. We can thus take it that the workmen who would get a paid holiday would be about $3\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs in number.

29. The average daily earnings of the workmen working in different kinds of mines in India for the year December 1950 are shown at page 10 of the Annual Report of the Chief Inspector of Mines in India for 1950. They show that so far as the coal industry is concerned, the daily average earnings varied between round about Rs. 3 per day in the case of Overmen and Sirdars and Rs. 2-6-0 round about per day, in the case of miners and loaders, and skilled labourers, and less in the case of unskilled labourers. These figures unfortunately cannot give us a clear idea about the income or average income of the workmen working in the coal mines; because a great majority of workmen working in the mines are usually unskilled labourers. The Indian Coal Statistics for 1951 give the average weekly wages paid to labourers in the various coalfields in the Indian Union in the different months of 1951 and the last column thereof shows average wages for the entire Indian Union. In the months of April and May 1953, they were Rs. 12-1-3 and Rs. 11-15-6 respectively, as can be seen from page 10 of the monthly coal bulletins for these months. Taking the week to be six working days, it would mean that the weekly average daily income of a labourer would be Rs. 2 per day and this would be for the entire Indian Union. In some parts, it may be more and in some parts, it may be less; but taking the industry as a whole, this would be the average income. Even if we take the average income of Rs. 2-4-0 (instead of Rs. 2) per day, it would mean that by giving one paid holiday, the industry would have to spend Rs. 787,500 for it. Thus, the industry would have to pay at most Rs. 15,75,000 per year for the above two holidays, if they are given as paid holidays.

30. As against this, we find that the output of coal in the different years has also varied from year to year and as against about 25 millions of tons which were taken out every year between 1941 and 1944, the output has now increased and it was 322,96,713 tons and 344,30,522 tons in 1950 and 1951 respectively (see pages 123-27 of the Chief Inspector of Mines Annual Report 1950 and Indian Coal Statistics 1951 respectively). In April and May 1953, the output of coal was 3,244,402 tons and 3,195,805 tons respectively (see page 11 of the Monthly Coal Bulletin for these two months). Even if we take the monthly average production of coal as 30 lakhs of tons (though it is actually more), it would mean that the average annual production (output) would come to 360 lakhs tons.

31. As the industry may have to spend Rs. 15,75,000 per year for giving these holidays, and as the average annual production is about 360 lakhs tons, it would mean that the average cost of production for the whole year would go up by Rs. 15,75,000/360,00,000 per ton, i.e. 8.4 pies per ton. Even making some allowance for less production or greater payment, the average cost of production of coal would not go up by more than nine pies per ton by granting the above two holidays in one year. I may mention that the above holidays are two in a year and we must therefore take the entire production of the whole year for considering the average increase in cost by granting these holidays.

32. Looking to the great importance of the above days to the Nation, I do not think that the increase in the cost of production by nine pies per ton would be such a heavy burden on the industry that it cannot pay it. It was said that during the last 3 or 4 years, several collieries were prosecuted for non-payment of statutory liabilities like the Water Cess, Contribution to the Provident Fund etc.; but this would not necessarily mean that the industry was running at a loss. The above non-payments may be due to several causes. For instance, there may have been some disputes and quarrels among the partners or there may have been embezzlement of funds by a partner or a manager etc. These may be reasons why some individual collieries may not have been in a position to pay its dues. In some cases, non-payment may be due to negligence or an attempt to avoid payments. It was then said that some collieries had been sold but there is no evidence to show this. Further the fact that though some collieries were sold, purchasers could be found for the same; and this would be an indication that the industry is not at its ebb.

33. I was also told that there has been an imposition of new taxes, that the coal is a wasting industry and that the prices of coal have been reduced by Government. I am not considering all these points; because for the purpose of this Reference, it is not necessary for me to do so. As I said above, the average cost of production would not go up by more than nine pies per ton by giving the above two holidays to the workmen every year and looking to the fact that the days are of national importance, this small increase should not deter the Tribunal or industry from granting these holidays. In this connection, it is significant to note that the Indian Mining Association who represented the collieries employing a vast majority of the workmen has agreed to recommend to its members the granting of these holidays as paid holidays and this also would show that the cost of these holidays would not be very great.

34. On the whole, after having given my careful consideration to the question, I am of opinion that the workmen working in the coal industry should be given holiday with pay on the Independence Day and the Republic Day, i.e. 15th August and 26th January every year.

35. I now proceed to consider some questions regarding details for giving these holidays. The first question is as to who should get these paid holidays and for this, the answer is simple. Anyone who is on the pay roll of the colliery on the day would be entitled to the holiday with pay; that is, even if a person was employed on the previous day, he would be entitled to the paid holiday, if his name was put on the roll of the colliery.

36. The next question of detail is as to what should be the amount to be paid to a time-rated worker. In this connection, I may refer to para. 5 of the compromise between the Indian Mining Association and the Indian National Mine Workers Federation Exhibit 78 above referred to. It lays down that for the purpose of calculating wages of a piece-rated worker, the same procedure should be followed as in the case of leave wages. Leave pay has been provided for in para. 15 of the Standing Orders for the coal mining industry and it is to be computed on the basis of the daily average earning of the workmen for the preceding 30 days prior to his leave and should such average earnings be not available, it is to be computed on the basis of the daily average earnings of all the workers of the same category for the same month. It is further provided that for the purpose of such computation, the cash value of any free issue of food and any cash concession drawn by the workers during the said month should be similarly averaged and should be taken into account. I think this is reasonable and this should be the basis on which wages of a piece-rated worker should be paid for giving the pay for the above days.

37. The last question of detail refers to the workmen known as essential service workmen who because of the essential nature of their work, cannot be allowed to enjoy the above holiday or holidays. The question is as to what should be done with respect to them. At one time, I was considering whether giving these people a holiday on some other day in the same week or giving them one day's more leave in the year would be desirable or not. But all the representatives of the employers and the workmen who appeared before me were not inclined favourably to this view. All of them agreed that the better alternative would be to grant them extra wages for the day. According to one section of the employers, it was urged that they should get two days' wages for the day, that is, one day for its being a paid holiday and one day for their working on that day. Another section of employers urged that these workmen should get $2\frac{1}{2}$ times their wages; while the remaining section accepted the contention of the workmen. It was urged on behalf of the workmen that these workmen should be paid $2\frac{1}{2}$ days' or three days' wages according to as they were working on the surface or underground. They urged that they would be entitled to one day's wages for its being a paid holiday and in addition, they should get $1\frac{1}{2}$ times or two times the wages for doing overtime work ($1\frac{1}{2}$ times in the case of surface workers and two times in the case of underground workers). Reliance was placed on Section 33 of the Indian Mines Act which lays down that where a person employed in a mine works therein for more than 48 hours whether above or below ground, he shall in respect of such overtime work be entitled to wages at twice the ordinary rate of wages if he works below ground and $1\frac{1}{2}$ times at that rate if he works above ground. In this connection, I may here refer to the Joshi Agreement. Section 4 of it lays down that for work done on a Sunday or recognised day of weekly rest and for work on a closed holiday, daily rated workers should be paid $1\frac{1}{2}$ times normal rate. It further lays down that the daily rated workers should get $1\frac{1}{2}$ times normal rate in addition to the day's normal wages for work done on a day which is a holiday with pay. It lastly lays down that for work done on a Sunday or on a day which is a closed holiday, the monthly rated staff should be paid $1\frac{1}{2}$ daily wage which should be standardised at $1/26$ of the month in addition to his monthly salary. I may then refer to rule 6 of the Standing Orders for the coal mining industry which lays down that weekly and daily rated employees shall receive overtime payment at $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the normal daily rate of work, on the weekly rest day, recognised holidays and for overtime work for other days. In other words, this rule provides for making overtime payment for work done not only on the weekly rest day but also for work done on recognised holidays. The Independence Day and Republic Day are, according to my decision, to be recognised holidays and hence the workmen are entitled to overtime payment for working on those days. Joshi Agreement was arrived at and the Standing Orders were passed at the time when the old Mines Act was enforced. The new Mines Act 1952 has now provided for overtime payments at different rates for surface and underground workers. The surface workers are now to get $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the usual wages for overtime work and underground workers are to get double the wages for overtime work. I think that these rates should prevail for work done on the above holidays. In other words, those workmen who (because of the essential nature of their service) are required to work on 15th August and 26th January, should get three times and $2\frac{1}{2}$ times their usual wages for work done on the above days according to as they are working underground or on the surface respectively.

38. The above directions will apply to the Independence Day and Republic Day hereafter. This leaves me with the question about the past four days referred to in para. 1 of the present reference, namely, 15th August 1950, 26th January 1951, 15th August 1951 and 26th January 1952. I have also to consider the question of the holidays that occurred after the date of the reference but before the date of this decision, that is, 15th August 1952, 26th January 1953 and 15th August 1953. According to my above decision, the workmen are entitled to paid holidays on every Republic Day and every Independence Day and they were therefore entitled to paid holidays on the above days also. In most of the cases, however, almost all the workmen have worked on those days and the question is as to what would be the proper order that should be passed in respect of work done on those days.

39. In my opinion, a distinction must be drawn between past days and the days which will occur hereafter. Till the date of this decision, or rather till this award becomes enforceable, the Independence Day and the Republic Day were not recognised holidays in the industry. As a matter of fact, at present not a single day has been recognised as paid holidays in the coal industry. No doubt, the workmen were claiming the above days as paid holidays and the Tribunal is now accepting the claim of the workmen. That, however, would not necessarily mean that they should be treated on par with the holidays that would occur hereafter.

The industry bona fide believed that they were not bound to give these days as paid holidays and that is why these days were never declared as holidays, with the result that most of the workmen worked on those days. In my opinion, for working on these past holidays, it would not be fair or proper to ask the industry to pay them wages at overtime rates; because at the time when the work was taken from them, these days were not recognised holidays. At the same time, I think that the workmen who have actually worked on the above days should get twice their usual wages, that is one day's wages for its being a paid holiday and one day for their doing work on that day; and the employers should make payments accordingly. Of course, in doing so, they will be entitled to deduct payments already made by them to the difference workmen for the above days. I would also direct that if any workman has already been paid more than double the wages for any of these past days, no recovery should be made from him for the extra payment. This applies to the holidays beginning from 15th August 1950 and ending on 15th August 1953. Hereafter, that is, in respect of holidays from 28th January 1954, the above award would apply, that is, all the workmen would be entitled to a paid holiday and if any workmen is asked to work on that day, he should be paid wages at overtime rates as mentioned above.

I pass my award accordingly.
